

PRZECHOWKA CEMETERY:

Location: 53°23'25.8"N 18°23'16.7"E

See also: <http://lapidaria.wikidot.com/swiecie-nad-wisla?fbclid=IwAR1EfrRbf0QjX5facwIQT0k9-PGSuwbMM21VQVjgVuFqBL9iV6G6ib-Yawg>

View of the cemetery looking to the southwest with the main village road in the foreground. The ground of the cemetery is covered in small lilac bushes and Michal Targowsky says the cemetery is maintained by folks from the Mennonite cottage in nearby Chrystkowo.

View up the Przechowka road looking almost due west towards Konopat with the cemetery on the left (south).

The southern edge of the cemetery looking downhill into the forest.

Another view to the south of the cemetery grounds. In this direction the Przechowka villagers' fields would have stretched out towards the Vistula but today it's thick forest.

A view looking more toward the west along the main road toward the area where the 1906 map indicates the schoolhouse. Could the school and meetinghouse have stood in this direction?

View to the north from the cemetery towards the road and the forest between cemetery and Mondi factory.

Michal Targowski and my 9th half-cousin, twice removed, Lena Razlaf, looking for gravestones.

Michal pointed out that the ground here is not rocky at all so any stones found here are likely memorial stones of some sort.

This stone was the most interesting to me. I can make out a number of letters but not enough to actually read the inscription.

The stone here to the left seems to indicate a date in the 1750s (perhaps it says 1751).

This stone has words painted on it instead of inscribed into it but nothing legible.

In a number of places, we found collections of smaller stones group in oval shapes. Michal said this would be a very old grave marker for a person whose family did not have the resources to collect 1 large stone as a memorial.

And here is another, clearly oval-shaped, collection of smaller stones marking a poor person's grave.

Large, very old tree marking the front of the cemetery at Konopat.

Location: 53°22'59.8"N 18°21'21.7"E

Konopat

Konopat

Dworzysko (53°22'30.0"N 18°20'26.4"E)

Cemeteries at Konopat and Dworzysko were maybe almost as large as Przechowka but the gravestones were generally newer. Przechowka was fairly clean – in fact I didn't notice any litter there. But Konopat and Dworzysko were filled with rubbish – old tires, plastic bags and bottles, etc.

Dworzysko

The cemetery at Jeziorki is located northeast from the main village road among the farmers' fields. The large trees in this photo mark the cemetery ($53^{\circ}28'55.4''\text{N}$ $18^{\circ}11'25.3''\text{E}$)

Again, small lilacs cover the floor of the cemetery. This is by far the best stone in the cemetery but there doesn't appear to be an inscription at all.

